Possessive Nouns

A possessive noun is a noun that indicates ownership or relationship. The possessive form is used to show that something belongs to or is associated with the noun.

Note : In most cases, a possessive noun is formed by adding an apostrophe followed by the letter s → ('s) to the noun. If the noun is plural and already ends in – s – only an apostrophe is added (s').

- The apostrophe (') is used to show possession or belonging. When the noun is singular, we usually add an apostrophe and an s to the noun to show possession or belonging.
 Eg: The girl's dress (the dress of the girl)
 The spider's web (the web of the spider)
- Most plural nouns end with an 's', so we just add an apostrophe (') after the s to show possession or belonging. It indicates that many people or animals own or possess something.
 Eg: The girls' dresses (the dresses of the girls)
 The cats' tails (the tails of the cats)
- In names ending with -s we add an apostrophe (') after the – s to show possession or belonging.
 Eg: Keats' poetry (the poetry of Keats)
- In plural nouns that do not end in – s, we usually add an apostrophe and an – s to the noun to show possession or belonging.
 Eg: women's college (the college for women)
- In compound nouns (a noun that is made of two or more words), the last word takes the apostrophe and the letter – s.
 Eg: My sister-in-law's daughter (daughter of my sister-in-law)
- Similarly, in names/titles consisting of several words, the last word takes the apostrophe and the –s.
 Eg: Nawab of Rampur's property
- When two nouns in possessive case are closely connected or shows an apposition (a noun that follows another noun to further describe it or explain it), the 's is added to the second noun.
 Eg: The King and Queen's anniversary
- But when separate possession is to be indicated, the 's is repeated.
 Eg: Robinson's and Edward's offices
- Possessive nouns do not always denote possession instead, it may also indicate origin, kind, authorship, etc.
 Eg: Akbar's fort (the fort built by Akbar)
 St. Paul's cathedral (the cathedral dedicated to St. Paul)
 Mira's songs (songs composed or sung by Mira)

(Students will write it in the exercise book)
