A visit to a book fair

Last Sunday our class visited the Kolkata Book Fair, and I was very excited because I had never seen so many books in one place before.

As we entered the fair, my eyes were filled with colourful sights. There were bright stalls, tall shelves packed with books, and flags fluttering everywhere. I could hear cheerful music, people chatting happily, and the soft sound of pages turning. The smell of fresh paper and new books floated in the air. This year the theme country was Argentina. The Argentina pavilion looked beautiful with blue and white decorations. I saw pictures of famous Argentine writers and displays about their culture and literature. There were also posters of football star Lionel Messi and information about the graceful tango dance. I visited many book stalls during the fair. At one stall I found books by Rabindranath Tagore, Satyajit Ray, and Sukumar Ray. I was excited to see Feluda adventures and funny poems from Abol Tabol. At another stall I explored science books about stars, planets, and dinosaurs. I even answered a small quiz and won a colourful bookmark.

Before leaving, I bought a storybook and promised myself to read every day. I returned home happy, realizing that books are treasures that help us learn and share knowledge.
